Wilson confesses for cases; desertion, twenty; drunkenness, maintenance of the public credit. This point would be a good one if the duties were not so high as to cut off revenue. They demand that the duties shall be put so high for their protection as to exclude forcign goods, and then claim that the Government cannot get along without the largest possible receipts of revenue. If they were homest in their protessions, find were really solicitous for the interests of the Government, they would not claimer for protection to an extent which would prevent importations, but they would be fixed at that point at which the greatest amount of revenue would accrue. This would be what has always been called, in democratic phraseology, the "revenue limit." But the fact is, that in their greed for gain, they would be willing to see every other interest perish, provided they would be benefited thereby.

NEWS AND POLITICS. Notwiths Business at the South.

From the Philadelphia Age.]

Notwithstanding all the hindrances of scanty capital, want of a proper labor system, tardy if not unwise legislation, and the wreck and ruin of recent war, the business of the South is improving. Each day gives additional evidences of this gratifying fact. The newspapers are one by one beginning to make their appearance in new and improved dresses, and their columns are well filted with advertisements. Stores and and the roved dresses, and their columns are well flued with advertisements. Stores and dwellings are in demand, and Northern manufacturers are receiving larger orders for agricultural implements, and other articles of necessary use. In the large scabbard towns the trade movement is plumly perceptible. In New Orleans, Savannan, Williamington and Charleston there are not stores. sington and Charleston there are not stores enough to supply the wants of the business community.
